Actor Chris Lowell on season 3 of 'Glow' and being on set with Geena Davis

The hit show returns to Netflix this Friday.
PAT KING

This weekend, the hit Netflix series "Glow" will be returning for its third season as it follows the Gorgeous Ladies of Wrestling as they take their show to Vegas. Finding a residency in a theater amongst the glitz and glamour of "Sin City" shows the ladies a new perspective on what it takes to succeed in show business amongst the town's crowded field of entertainment. What sacrifices will they have to make in order to elevate the show to the potential that they know it has?

"What I found so moving about the third season is that it's a real empathetic showcase of the life of a performer," says actor Chris Lowell, who plays Bash Howard, the onetime financier of the production and the show's announcer. "Not just a wrestler, but any actor. I think a big part of it is, like if you are doing a play or something, there is so much excitement and buzz and stress and manic energy leading up to opening night.

And then, once the show is set and you are doing it night after night and show after show, it really starts to take a different kind of muscle to maintain. It really starts to become about, how are you maintaining your physical and mental health? How are you trying to keep it fresh? How do balance such an insane work schedule with family or friendships? That's something that anyone who has done this, ever, can relate to."

As the third season unfolds, many of the show's stars come face-to-face with an uglier side of show business that was only hinted at during their brief time on the air. Now that they have arrived as performers in one of the business's most notorious hubs, what compromises will they need to make in order to be successful?

"When you're an actor, when you first start out, all you care about is acting. Then it's a real scary moment in your life when you've achieved what you thought you wanted and realize that it's not everything that you thought it was going to be," explains Lowell. "In fact, you want more. Some of those things that you want are in conflict with the choices you've made as an artist. How do you get that balance? I think all of those things are universally felt and powerful and it's a really great thing to watch these characters go through that this season."

For Lowell's character Bash, finding success in Vegas means that he has to hide any evidence of his homosexuality, and when we meet him in season 3, he is throwing himself fully into the marriage he stumbled into with wrestler Britanica. Lowell was amazed to find out about the conservative nature of such a notoriously over-the-top and openly promiscuous town during the '80s, when the show takes place.

"The level of homophobia that existed in Vegas in the '80s is not what I would have expected," says Lowell upon reading the scripts from showrunners Liz Flahive and Carly Mensch. "The reality is, when Liberace has to stay in the closet, you know you're in a homophobic town."

Bash is certainly at a crossroads in his life where he needs to either come to terms with himself or keep his secrets hidden in order to navigate the waters of success. Lowell assures that those answers won't be found easily.

"Bash is still on his psychosexual odyssey and I think that he definitely makes progress in that search for himself," he says. "But it doesn't necessarily mean by the end of the season that he knows all of the answers. I still think he has miles to go before he sleeps."

The show features one of the strongest casts on television right now, with stellar performances from Allison

Brie as Ruth, Betty Gilpin as Debbie and Marc Maron as the wrestling show's director, Sam Silvia. The third season also will welcome Oscar-winning actor — and overall legendary person — Geena Davis to its cast as Sandy Devereaux St. Clair, a onetime Vegas showgirl who is now the entertainment director of the Fan-Tan Hotel and Casino where the show is in residence. So, what did Lowell think of being on set with such a legend of the screen?

"Geena and I had a lot of fun together," Lowell says. "I think everybody was so nervous when she came on set and was trying to be either calm and collected or give her her space. I just immediately started asking questions about 'A League of Their Own' and that she's an Olympic archer, a part of MENSA, and what it was like filming 'Thelma and Louise.' I had no shame in my fanboy crush on her and the work that she's done. I think Geena had a lot of patience with me, which I could not be happier about. It was great to be in the presence of the legend that she is."

Billy Crudup on the emotional standoff of 'After the Wedding'

The remake of the Danish film, co-starring Julianne Moore and Michelle Williams, hits theaters this weekend. PAT KING

The streets of Midtown Manhattan are being treated to a vulgar display of rain outside the hotel where I meet actor Billy Crudup to talk about his new film, "After the Wedding." In a way, it's perfect weather to have as a backdrop to talk about such a heavy and emotional film that delivers high-water-mark performances not only from Crudup, but his co-stars Julianne Moore and Michelle Williams.

Adapted from the original Danish film by Bart Freundlich, "After the Wedding" centers around an American woman named Isabel, played by Michelle Williams, who is currently working in an orphanage in India. The organization is running low on funding and they must come up with ideas for how to find investors quickly. Out of the blue, she is contacted by a wealthy CEO named Theresa who is offering to give the orphanage a generous donation. To receive the money, Isabel must travel to New York to meet with Theresa. While hashing out the details, Theresa invites Isabel to stay the weekend and attend her daughter Abby's wedding. Once Isabel arrives, she immediately recognizes Theresa's husband (and Abby's father) as her ex, Oscar, played by Crudup. As information unfolds, Isabel learns that Abby is actually the child Oscar and she conceived years ago and had, supposedly, given up for adoption.

At the moment when Isabel and Oscar reunite, you truly feel the pit in your stomach, second-hand, from the estranged couple. It is almost like an emotional standoff where the audience is to decide which character's motivations are the most justified given the circumstances of their situation. That kind of moral predicament is what drew Crudup to the film in the first place.

"When we were thinking about doing this movie, I was saying that I wanted to play Oscar when he has to manage that situation," says Crudup. "When he's seen Isabel leave, when they've made the pact to give their daughter up for adoption, and when he's pacing in his room, knowing that she's six blocks away and he can't help himself but walk to the adoption agency and that he can't help but go back. That struggle is fascinating and one that creatively is new to me. I haven't seen that portrayed before. So to imagine Oscar having gone through that and then ultimately coming out of it thinking that he has done the absolute right thing, only to discover later on, after having 20 years of fortification in that belief, to see it completely shattered. That's a great dramatic arc and I think a confusing one, too, for audiences."

Audiences will surely choose who their villains and heroes are while watching this film. But, what the story does so wonderfully is pose the question: What would you do if the shoe was on the other foot?

"I feel that so often in life there are not simple answers to human behavior," explains Crudup. "I mean, particularly at a time when we're super-busy identifying our differences, the commonality we have far exceeds that. It's just much more confusing to tolerate all of it. We try to live in a civil society, but the actual interpersonal communication, expression of beliefs, and expression of values and feelings are dictated by social discourse. And in order to have a reasonable one, you have to have a humane approach to people, which is that we may not agree on things, but we all belong and we all have to try to get along. And that's, to me, a generous way of approaching a civil-social society. And so I think this film tries to address that emotionally."

One of the interesting aspects of this remake of the original Susanne Bier film is that Freundlich chose to swap the genders of all of the characters. Crudup believes this reversal was an important narrative device in order to give Moore and Williams the opportunity to take on such powerful roles, but it also gave him the chance to sink his teeth into the vulnerability of his character.

"That's an atypical patriarch role, right?" Crudup says. "It does something great for male actors, as well, to be sure to give them the opportunity to find the features of masculinity that happened in that kind of power strip, a structural change. It's a phenomenal thing."

Joe Gatto of 'Impractical Jokers' on the joy of 'punishing' your friends

The hit truTV hidden-camera show just got picked up for season 9 PAT KING

It was recently announced that the hit hidden camera comedy, "Impractical Jokers", will be returning for its ninth season next year. The show is rated the number one comedy on cable and was responsible for ushering the great roster of comedies on truTV. I caught up with one of the group's founding members, Joe Gatto, to talk about getting picked up for a new season ahead of tonight's season eight midseason return at 10 p.m.

"Impractical Jokers" just got renewed for its ninth season. Did you ever think the show would make it to nine seasons, let alone the No. 1 comedy on cable? No! I mean, I was happy to get episode two! Season eight, we're going to hit our 200th episode, which is just insane to me. And then to get greenlit to go for another season is just beyond any wild expectations, you know? Right, right. That's like, no, in between seasons, you know, um, you know, as you've gone along, you know,

I guess like, um, what's the preparation like between seasons? Like, um, do you guys kind of like sit in there? You know, there's this, there's only so much you can divulge between you and the rest of the group because you're, you're trying to make everyone feel uncomfortable.

What is preparation for each new season like?

Well, there's a lot of different ways that things come up with the show. We spend so much time together, like with our touring and you know, I'm with these guys every basically almost every day in my life. I show them more than my family. You know, there was one point actually that we show each other for 52 days straight. Wow. Nobody should see each other that much. So we, uh, you know, we, we either, you know, we'll be around and doing something and, you know, we live our lives together. We'll go shopping together and we'll go to the movies and we'll hang out cause we're friends and while we're out and about we'll be like, "that'd be weird if we did that on the show." We'll think of stuff on the fly then just by being out in public. At the beginning of every season, we take six weeks with writers and we just sit in a room and we brainstorm new ways for challenges to push the envelope and new ways to make comedy, you know? New goals, new challenges, new way to use actors and, and, and things. So the show has really evolved into a hidden camera comedy show throughout the years.

What gives you more satisfaction, when a prank goes down perfectly or when you are pleasantly surprised by something going completely different than you expected it to? Well, you know, there are two different types of satisfactions. Cause like when you're getting punished, you don't know what's happening. If it's good you're miserable because it's happening. But then you're like proud of your friend cause they got you d it's a good one. You're like, "oh that was good." It's bittersweet that way. Some of ours are long burns and take a lot of planning. So when those go off without a hitch, it's like, "oh, all right we did that well." So it's like a pride when you're on the other side of it.

ECOFASHION SHOW

We are proud to showcase a number of local and regional designers who represent a broad spectrum of approaches to Eco-Fashion. EcoFashion is important not only for saving resources and reducing waste, but for the unique and innovative aspects it brings to the fashion world.

The designers we have selected to be in our EcoFashion show this year are local, regional and international: Consuelo Perez brings color and object into play; Nilton Rodrigues turns everyday objects into exciting fashion; Janaya Josephs turns scrap into treasure, Queen Allotey-Pappoe works only with non-GMO cotton from Ghana; Keisha Greaves inspires wheelchair-bound women to be their best with organic tees; Reginald Merome redefines remnants and eco-fashion for men; Mela Miles who has been at the forefront of the EcoFashion movement, upcycles everything — nothing goes to waste; Aiste Zitnikaite uses eco-friendly materials to make fashion chic; Angie Brutus creatively blends style and color; and Rose Orelup (dress featured here) takes ordinary objects that we would have thrown away and makes them extraordinary.

Trump visits El Paso, Dayton as protesters shout, 'Do something!'

The president was met in Ohio with chants of "You are why."

U.S. President Donald Trump met victims and first responders from last weekend's deadly shootings in Texas and Ohio on Wednesday, and chanting protesters accused him of inflaming tensions with anti-immigrant and racially charged rhetoric.

In El Paso, on the border with Mexico, Trump visited the University Medical Center where wounded victims were treated after a man who had posted an anti-immigrant manifesto online killed 22 people at a Walmart store on Saturday.

Hundreds of protesters, some holding signs reading "Trump is racist," "Love over hate" and "Send him back!"

Protesters gather around a baby Trump balloon to voice their rally against gun violence and a visit from U.S. President Trump following a mass shooting in Dayton. REUTERS gathered under a broiling sun at a nearby park to condemn Trump and his presence in El Paso.

In a visit earlier in the day to Dayton, Ohio, that was mostly out of public view, Trump met shooting victims at Miami Valley Hospital where the wounded were treated after nine people and the suspect were killed in a rampage early on Sunday. It was the second of two mass shootings 13 hours apart that shocked the country.

Crowds of protesters outside the hospital and in downtown Dayton chanted "Do something!" and "You are why," and held signs reading "Hate not welcome here" and "Stop this terror."

White House spokeswoman Stephanie Grisham said the president and first lady Melania Trump met several victims in their hospital rooms and others who had been discharged in Ohio, and thanked the medical staff for their work.

"It was a warm and wonderful visit," Trump said on Twitter. "Tremendous enthusiasm & even love."

The back-to-back massacres have reopened the national debate over gun safety.

As he left the White House, Trump said he wanted to strengthen background checks for gun purchases and make sure mentally ill people did not carry guns. He predicted congressional support for those two measures but not for banning assault rifles.

"I can tell you that there is no political appetite for that at this moment," Trump told reporters at the White House. "But I will certainly bring that up. ... There is a great appetite, and I mean a very strong appetite, for background checks."

In Dayton, Trump was greeted at the airport by a bipartisan group of state and local officials, including Democratic Dayton Mayor Nan Whaley and Democratic U.S. Sen. Sherrod Brown.

They told reporters afterward they urged Trump to call on Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell to bring the Senate back from its summer recess to work on a House-passed bill that expands background checks on gun buyers.

Brown said he asked Trump to promise he would sign that bill. "He only said that we will get things done," Brown said, adding the president had been "comforting" to the victims. REUTERS

Vazquez sworn in as Puerto Rico's governor after court ousts Pierluisi

Puerto Rico got its third governor in less than a week on Wednesday just hours after the bankrupt U.S. territory's supreme court ruled that Pedro Pierluisi's assumption of the office was unconstitutional and ordered him to leave.

The island's justice secretary, Wanda Vazquez, was sworn in as governor at the supreme court in San Juan.

A unanimous decision by the nine-member high court nullified Pierluisi's governorship based on the fact his earlier appointment as secretary of state and next in line for governor had not been confirmed by both chambers of the legislature.

Pierluisi, who was given until 5 p.m. local time by the court to vacate the office, said he "must step aside and support" Vazquez.

"This is a time when we must all unite for Puerto Rico, leaving behind any partisan, ideological or personal agendas," he said in a statement.

Newly installed Puerto Rico Gov. Wanda Vazquez. REUTERS TV

Vazquez last week initially expressed an unwillingness to take over the island's top government post after being targeted by protesters for being too close to disgraced Governor Ricardo Rossello, who left office last Friday.

In a statement following the court ruling, Vazquez said: "Puerto Rico needs certainty and stability."

The high court's ruling followed weeks of political turmoil with Rossello resigning after days of protests demanding he step down.

Offensive chat messages between Rossello and his closest allies and federal corruption charges against two former members of his administration sparked the protests, which drew around a third of the island's 3.2 million people to the streets. REUTERS

REQUEST FOR RELEASE OF FUNDS

On or about August 24, 2019, the City of Boston, acting through its Department of Neighborhood Development (DND), and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, acting through the Department of Housing and Community Development (DHCD), will individually submit requests to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) for the release of Federal funds through the HOME Investment Partnerships Program pursuant to the authority of Title II of the Cranston-Gonzalez National Affordable Housing Act, as amended (42 U.S.C. 12701 et seq.), and for the release of Housing Choice Vouchers Program (HCVP) funds under Section 8 of the Housing Act of 1937, as amended for the following project:

COTE VILLAGE:

The Cote Village project involves the new construction of a mixed income housing and commercial development on four vacant parcels totaling 113,695 square feet located at the corner of Cummins Highway and Regis Road in the Mattapan neighborhood of Boston. A proposed four-story building will contain 52 rental apartments and 4,172 square feet of ground floor commercial space. Four (4) new townhouse buildings will contain 24 rental units. The development will also include 84 parking spaces and a 12,000 SF public plaza. Of the 76 units, 8 will be rented as market-rate while the remaining 68 will be income-restricted affordable units (17 one-bedroom; 47 two-bedroom; 12 three-bedroom). The Cote Village project has received Article 80 and 121A approval from the Boston Planning and Development Agency. The total project cost is approximately $36,861,103, including up to $1,000,000 in federal HOME funds from the City of Boston. The developer anticipates seeking $825,000 in federal HOME funds and Project Based Vouchers from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

OBJECTIONS TO RELEASE OF FUNDS

HUD will accept objections to its release of funds and the City of Boston's and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' certification for a period of fifteen days following the anticipated submission date or its actual receipt of the request (whichever is later), only if they are on one of the following bases: (a) The certification was not executed by the Certifying Officer of either the City of Boston or the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; (b) the City of Boston or the Commonwealth of Massachusetts has omitted a step or failed to make a decision of finding required by HUD regulations at 24 CFR Part 58; (c) the grant recipient has committed funds or incurred costs not authorized by 24 CFR Part 58 before approval of a release of funds by HUD; or (d) another Federal agency acting pursuant to 40 CFR Part 1504 has submitted a written finding that the project is unsatisfactory from the standpoint of environmental quality. Green Line passengers at the Newton Highlands stop headed for shuttle buses after a train on the D branch derailed earlier Wednesday morning. CHRIS LISINSKI/SHNS

Operator error blamed for Green Line derailment

The morning incident displaced commuters during rush hour.

The MBTA is pointing the finger at the operator of the Green Line trolley that derailed Wednesday morning in Newton, saying a preliminary investigation found that the driver did not have the go-ahead to proceed just before the derailment.

The Green Line train heading inbound on the D Branch was pulling out of Riverside Station in Newton just after 6 a.m. Wednesday when the second car in the two-car train derailed at a track switch, the T said. The only passenger onboard was not injured and the T dispatched dozens of shuttle buses to replace rush-hour service for commuters.

The T said its initial investigation into the derailment found no problems with the train, track infrastructure or the signal system. Instead, investigators are "focused on the operation of the train as it departed Riverside Station," the T said.

"The preliminary investigation shows the train's operator did not have the signal system's authorization to proceed. By not allowing the track switch to be properly aligned, the second car of the train came off the rails," the agency said in a statement. "The train's operator, who was hired in March of this year, has been removed from service while investigators complete their work."

The derailed car was put back onto the tracks at 11 a.m. and the T said that regular service on the Green Line's D Branch would resume shortly after 11:45 a.m.

MBTA statement

"I want to apologize to the Green Line customers whose commuters were disrupted this morning," MBTA General Manager Steve Poftak said in a statement. "We will complete the formal investigation as soon as possible and take corrective action if needed. We can and we must do better."

The Green Line's derailment Wednesday comes as riders on the Red Line are still coping with suboptimal service since a Red Line train derailed June 11 in Dorchester, wiping out signal infrastructure as it careened off the track. That incident, which came just days after another Green Line derailment blamed on operator error, spurred the T to form a review panel to review the agency's safety practices and derailments.

The safety panel includes former U.S. Secretary of Transportation Ray LaHood, former acting administrator of the Federal Transit Administration Carolyn Flowers and former New York City Transit President Carmen Bianco.

T officials have not announced the cause of the Red Line derailment, but this week said that delays stemming from the crash will extend until sometime in October. The T initially hoped to restore normal service by Labor Day.

Tom Brady's contract situation continues to be a hot-button topic.

GETTY IMAGES

IS THIS BRADY'S LAST YEAR WITH PATS?

Tom Brady said it himself: This is a unique situation.

But tell us something we don't already know.

The Patriots quarterback signed a new contract this past weekend. It was reported as a "two-year, $70 million extension." By now, everyone knows that translates to "salary cap manipulation."

Brady will receive an $8 million raise in the final year of his current contract, bumping up his 2019 salary from $15 million to $23 million. In the process, the Patriots were able to spread out Brady's cap hit with an "extension" worth $30 million in 2020 and $32 million in 2021, which, as a result, helped free up $5.5 million in cap space for the team this season.

It gives New England a total of $13 million in cap space for 2019, all while giving Brady a raise. Oh, and those two "extension" years? They both automatically void on the final day of the 2019 league year in March.

So that means Brady is still entering the final year of his contract and can become a free agent after this season.

Sound the alarms. Run to your nearest bunker.

Watch the 2019 NFL season as if it's the last, because Brady is pissed off and he is leaving New England the minute the league year is over.

[Takes a deep breath.]

OK, so that's a major overreaction. And to be honest, it's not even remotely close to how I've responded to this new Brady contract. But I do feel as if I'm in the minority in believing that this one-year-at-a-time approach is probably the most realistic approach for a situation that even Brady describes as "unique."

"It's a unique situation I'm in, ya know? Twentieth year with the same team, and I'll be 42 years old, so, I'm really not worried about it," said Brady on Monday, when asked about still having just one year left on his contract.

However you want to break it down, Brady is criminally underpaid.

It's a unique situation because he's still playing at an MVP-caliber level at 42. His performance at the quarterback position, at this age, is unprecedented.

So if you're the Patriots, a year-to-year approach is nothing more than smart business. Now, had the Patriots made Brady the highest-paid player in the NFL over the next three years with a monster fully-guaranteed contract, I'd be sitting here nodding my head in approval, as in, "It's about time."

And if Brady wanted to hold out for that monster fully-guaranteed contract, he wouldn't lose any fans in New England. In fact, he'd probably gain some more fans around the league for finally deciding to play hardball with Bill Belichick.

But he didn't. He signed the contract and took the $8 million raise. Nobody forced Brady to sign anything right now. For that, I can't feel too bad for the guy.

Wait, what's that? Brady just put his Brookline home on the market for $39.5 million?

Hold on, I need to run out and stock up on milk and bread!

[Takes another deep breath.]

Clearly I'm mocking the overreactions again. Breaking down Brady's new contract even further, you'll see that he also got the Patriots to agree to a provision that prevents them from slapping him with the Franchise Tag for the 2020 season.

So, just to clarify: Brady gets a raise, the guarantee that he can't be franchised next offseason, and the ability to open up enough cap space to potentially help add a piece to a Patriots team looking to win their second straight Super Bowl.

Combine that with Brady's acknowledgment of the uniqueness of it all, and I'm not necessarily seeing the same broken relationship between Brady and Belichick that others are panicking about with this new contract.

Is Brady the happiest guy in the league? Probably not.

But he might be in February, which will get him another unique raise with the Patriots in 2020.

NFL betting: Patriots, Titans over/unders

Go to MetroBet.us for all of your sports betting needs!

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

The defending Super Bowl champion Patriots have the highest over/under win total at MetroBet.us/Sugar at 11.

That number seems about right as the Pats have gone Over 11 wins in eight of the last nine seasons.

The only outlier?

Last season, actually, when the Pats hit 11 wins right on the nose with an 11-5 record. They only found their groove in the playoffs, and now more than ever New England treats the regular season as something slightly more important than 16 exhibition games — a tune-up for the postseason. That's not to say that the Patriots will finish as a Wild Card at 9-7 or 10-6, though.

Bill Belichick has always highly valued getting one of the top two seeds in the AFC, and the only way to typically get there is to get to 12 or 13 wins.

The Pats barely squeaked by Kansas City on the road in the AFC Championship game, and here's thinking that Belichick will place a little more emphasis on the regular season than he did a year ago, given the importance of home-field advantage throughout the postseason.

With a roster that has slightly improved overall since last year — the additions of LB Jamie Collins, DE Michael Bennett, WR Demaryius Thomas and first-round stud WR N'Keal Harry should pay off immensely — 12 victories seems about right.

The play: $10 on Patriots Over 11 wins at MetroBet.us/Sugar

Titans

The Titans offer some of the best value available at MetroBet.us/Sugar as eight wins seems quite low for a team on the upswing, a team that has gone 9-7 in each of the past three seasons.

toughness to a deep Titans roster, and Tennessee was still in the playoff mix at the end of last year despite a rugged schedule. Vrabel's Titans posted home wins over the Eagles and Patriots, and road wins over the Cowboys and Jaguars (early in the season, when Jacksonville still looked like a contender).

They also filled some major holes this offseason, bringing in Ryan Tannehill to back up the injury-prone Marcus Mariota, landing DE Cameron Wake and WR Adam Humphries in free agency, and nabbing guard Rodger Saffold in free agency as well.

Pats typically put up big points in preseason

Sharps (professional wagers) have been betting against the Patriots in their preseason opener Thursday night at Detroit. An opening line of Pats -3 over the Lions dropped to -1.5 or -1 by midweek depending on the sportsbook. Barring late headlines or heavy public betting, the over/under is likely to close at 35.5 or 36.

A quick and easy way to begin handicapping a football game is to determine the projected "market" score from the point spread and total.

Let's call Thursday's lines New England -1.5 and 36 for now. That would be a final score of New England 18.75, Detroit 17.25 (the Patriots are 1.5 points higher and the sum adds up to 36).

Do either of those strike you as vulnerable? If you think the Patriots are more likely to reach 20 or more, while the Lions make more sense for 17 or less...then the Pats are the play. But, if you think New England may have trouble putting up a number on the road against an opposing coach familiar with their system (Lions leader Matt Patricia was an assistant in New England from 2004 to 2017), then you can make a case for the Lions.

For the over/under, if you see both teams clearing the threshold, an Over bet is obvious. Same for the Under if you don't see either team getting there (neither Denver nor Atlanta made it last week in the Hall of Fame game that ended 14-10 against a projected score of 18.75 to 16.25).

The great thing about this approach is that it forces you to think about the market. You're not making knee-jerk bets on your favorite team, regardless of price. You're not blindly following stale trends or angles you heard about after oddsmakers have already priced them in. You're thinking about real-world skill sets and how they'll interact to reach a target.

An interesting question for analysts Thursday is whether or not the Patriots' offensive preparation and focus will ignite another fast preseason start. In their exhibition openers the last three preseasons, New England has scored 34 vs. New Orleans, 24 vs. Jacksonville and 26 vs. Washington. That helped drive all three games over low exhibition totals. The Pats covered two of the three (New Orleans and Washington), but lost to Jacksonville 31-24.

Sharps are showing with their money that they don't believe an offensive explosion is imminent. Let's see if they're right.

Summer futures prices currently show New England at 3/1 to win the AFC at a composite of global sportsbooks, 7/1 to repeat as Super Bowl champions.
